Introduction

For the first time in the Fondation Beyeler's history, the entire museum and its park are transformed into the site of an experimental exhibition. The exhibition aspires to stimulate artistic freedom, interdisciplinary exchange, and collective responsibility. The approach, as stated by Philippe Parreno and Precious Okoyomon, acknowledges 'the complexities and uncertainties involved in bringing artists together, yet it also embraces these entanglements as integral to the creative process'. Conceived as a living organism that changes and transforms, participants have contributed their thinking on every phase of the making of an exhibition from its conception, elaboration, and production to its creation and presentation. The public is invited to rediscover not only the gallery spaces in an unexpected way but also the collection which will be in motion. Turning up at different times, visitors will have different experiences within the same spaces. Just like the exhibition and the experience itself, the title of the summer show is contributed by the participants and will periodically change.

Concept by Sam Keller, Mouna Mekouar, Isabela Mora, Hans Ulrich Obrist, Precious Okoyomon, Philippe Parreno, and Tino Sehgal in close collaboration with the participants.

Dominique GONZALEZ-FOERSTER (*1965)

UNTITLED (nuage), 2024
LED screen

In the field, among spring blossoms, Dominique Gonzalez-Foerster invites the viewer to discover an ethereal vision of elsewhere, a space between clouds and angels. Since the mid-1980s, her work has drawn on her visions as well as her living memory of cinema, literature, architecture, and music to explore new possibilities. Since 2013, she has been developing the idea of 'apparitions' in different ways: live performances, holographic illusions, films. She has also explored abstraction and extra-terrestrial beings through VR experiments.

Here, she pushes beyond the painting-window metaphor, blurring the distinction between reality and representation, painting and screen, sky and angels. A mysterious cloud hosting a group of flying creatures creates an interaction between the visible and the invisible.

This is how it all started: ... I woke up in the middle of the night and had a vision. ... With time I now believe in my vision ... I was surrounded by inspiring friends, humans and non-humans, by angels, from now and earlier times. It was a beautiful, joyful crowd.

Precious OKOYOMON (*1993)

the sun eats her children, 2024
flowers, butterflies, sound, and animatronic

Precious Okoyomon has created a gloriously alive yet poisonous ecosystem. All the species selected are united by their toxic properties which range from mild to deadly. Subverting notions of flowers as fragile, pure and innocent, Okoyomon instils this apparently tame setting with an ominous undercurrent.

Beloved, a stuffed animatronic bear, lies on the ground, fluttering in and out of sleep, releasing a primordial scream. Yet, the most dazzling detail of this poisonous paradise are the gorgeous butterflies, which live, reproduce and die inside this garden over the course of the exhibition.

The World Is Breaking in Flowers the Breath of Things.

Our love is a blue instant and forward-looking sky

Every dream is a moment of freedom

Bliss hovering above the void

Resonate darkness can't be bound

It's always being born

Ash in hand

Myths arise where it sets

Knowing there is fire

Knowing there is war

Cities rising and falling

A small black river flowing

The speed of darkness

Everything burns repeatedly

Return back to the umbilical tongue

To vesicles of present breath

Swallow bits of tenderness

Bring yourself back to the earth

Philippe PARRENO (*1964)

MEMBRANE 2, 2024

geopolymer, steel, PLA, LED, 42 sensors, motors, microphones, and speaker

In the towering structure known as Membrane resides a nameless character with no physical form. This tower constitutes a one-plus-one-dimensional fictional and localised world. Constructed from metal and geopolymers, this world responds to an array of extradiegetic stimuli. Thanks to sensors embedded throughout its structure, ranging from atmospheric variations to changes in particle matter or geological shifts, Membrane has a non-visual perception of its environment. These perceptions constitute the 'affordances' of its system.

Actress Bae Doona lent her voice to the character, infusing it with human emotional depth. Membrane has a constructed language named ∂A , which, with its verb-subject-object (VSO) syntax, is a derivative function that evolves in response to various local conditions. Membrane translates electronic signals into sound and modulates them.

ILLUMINATED WALL, 2013–2024 and MARQUEE, 2024
steel, PLA, LED, and DMX

As visitors approach the reception desk to purchase their tickets, they are met with a blank marquee that shows no words coupled with a glowing wall. This strategic light arrangement places the staff in backlight, casting them as silhouettes. Their details become obscured, only their outlines visible against the light.

Fujiko NAKAYA (*1933)

UNTITLED, 2024

potable water, 1000 MeeFog nozzles, and high pressure pump motor system

Fujiko Nakaya was the first artist to use fog as a sculptural medium. Her approach is based on a subtle collaboration with water, atmosphere, air currents, directions, and time. Unfixed, fluid, and ephemeral, yet also dense and opaque, her fog is 'both a phenomenon and an artifact'.

At the Fondation Beyeler, Nakaya's fog spreads across the gardens south and north of the main building. The architecture, the art works and nature appear ghostly, as if haunted. All surfaces seem unfixed and mutable. Constantly appearing and dissipating into the atmosphere, Nakaya's fog conceals and reveals the structures and surroundings, creating a feeling of perpetual motion.

Fog makes visible things become invisible and invisible things – like wind – become visible.

Dozie KANU (*1993)

CLOAK-ROOM, 2024
mixed media

Dozie Kanu keeps his practice hybrid, questioning visual art and design. He refuses to offer a clear description of an object. Born and raised in Texas, he first went to New York City before moving to Portugal. In this exhibition, he transforms the cloakroom into a cabinet of curiosities. The lockers are converted into vitrines displaying objects. This collection, consisting of found or natural things with no clear connection to one another, resists classification and hierarchy. Each of Kanu's objects contains a combination of fact and fiction. They offer him the opportunity to tell a story or even to create a new one. Yet Kanu reminds us: 'I just can't get bogged down by the concepts too much because it's like soul spill'.

I think hope is one of the most important elements of what artists provide.

COLLECTION

Orchestrated by Tino Sehgal, this presentation of more than 70 collection works is constantly changing and shifting during the Fondation Beyeler's opening hours. The display will evolve in real time. This presentation, traditionally static, thus becomes more fluid and dynamic. It turns into a stream, a flow.

Sehgal's selection of collection works brings together artists from the early 20th century up to the present day, including Francis Bacon, Louise Bourgeois, Wolfgang Tillmans, Vincent van Gogh, and many more. As a counterpoint to the permanent collection, works recently produced or commissioned for this exhibition by Pierre Huyghe, Marlene Dumas, and Michael Armitage are integrated into this moving display.

Wade GUYTON (*1972)

UNTITLED, 2023–2024

Epson UltraChrome HDX inkjet on linen, twenty-six paintings

Two stacks of thirteen finished canvases each lean against the wall, mimicking a storage method in Wade Guyton's studio. The works seem part of an anonymous production process. Aside from the two at the front of each stack, only the works' edges buried beneath remain visible, like stripes or barcodes. Since the 2000s, Guyton has been using printers to investigate the traditional limits of painting. Analysing the effects of digital image production, abstract painting is explored through an interrogation of the pictorial process. As Guyton says: 'They are prints and not prints; photographs and not photographs; paintings and not paintings. The works are comfortable in this place of uncertainty. (...) How they are defined depends upon the point of view of the viewer.'

Marlene DUMAS (*1953)

THE ORIGIN OF PAINTING (The Double Room), 2018

TIME AND CHIMERA, 2020

THE MAKING OF, 2020
oil on canvas

Marlene Dumas' career spans over 40 years during which she has intensively analysed human figures. Her work operates as a kind of diary containing both a precise subject and a hidden message. In her paintings and drawings, she assigns an emotional language to the subject that transforms the figures beyond their actual appearance. Poetry and literature often play a part in her work, as does the translation from one medium to another. All three works were inspired by the erotic dark humour and ambiguous prose poems of Baudelaire's 'Paris Spleen'. One of her paintings bears the same title as one of the poems, The Double Room. These three works that represent imaginary figures, abstract moods or states of mind express 'the essence of painting'.

Painting as a shadow play

Painting as a gesture

The making of a move towards

Painting is about something that isn't there

MIMI NI MWIZI YA SOKO, 2023

SAYAN, 2022–2024

oil on lubugo bark cloth

Instead of canvas, Michael Armitage uses lubugo, a fabric made from fig tree bark used in Uganda to make shrouds or ritual garments. The influence of East African culture is evident in his vocabulary as he pays tribute to artists such as Katarikawe and Musoke. Drawing on ghosts of the past, he also takes inspiration from Goya, Gauguin, Schiele, Polke, and others.

Born in Nairobi, Armitage received his artistic training in London. Today he divides his time between Indonesia, Kenya, and the UK, with each of these countries offering something crucial to him. His practice gathers vitality from all these narratives, creating a homage to the rich history of painting while breaking down established ways of seeing it. Across his work, he fluctuates between the real and the surreal, the natural and the supernatural, the intelligible and the occult, order and chaos.

I would like all of the works to be different, but also unified. Different in the sense that every day is different, different in that experiences are always different, I'd like the work to reflect that sort of change and the way a mind changes, the way an attitude shifts.

Cildo MEIRELES (*1948)

ALTO, 2024

wood and speakers

Cildo Meireles is one of the most significant living artists from Latin America. His work evokes universal themes that are communicated to viewers through physical, mental and sensory elements in a rigorously designed and defined shared space. His installations also attract the public for their political and philosophical concepts. At the Fondation Beyeler, the famous voice of Íris Lettieri fills the space. Due to the temporal nature of the work, there are no two identical experiences. Meireles already gave shape to this idea in 1977 by placing a speaker in each of the four corners of a room. With the multiplicity of experiences this acoustic and visual sculpture opens up different layers of meanings gathered in the same place.

*We learned everything from those who came before.
We are all like snails, carrying our home, our universe.
There is a single art object being made by all artists throughout art history.*

Federico CAMPAGNA (*1984)

A LIBRARY AS LARGE AS THE WORLD, 2024

800 books in a cycle of four sections

A library conceptualised and selected by philosopher Federico Campagna and collaborators. Shaped like a garden of Pantelleria, it replicates the traditional symbol for the 'whole' and presents the four seasons in the life cycle of a 'world'.

Summer – so bright as to turn black – breeds the belief that reality can be contained and explained by rigid conceptual structures.

A mould-green autumn rots the framework of theory, stirring doubts and rebellions against what once seemed indisputable.

When winter descends – white, colourless – reality returns, mysterious, absurd, magnificently threatening. At last, a red-blood spring brings the awareness that any 'world' is a fiction built over an abyss. And the cycle begins anew.

To protect it from the winds, the inhabitants of Pantelleria plant a citrus tree inside a tower and graft it with shoots of four fruits.

Frida ESCOBEDO (*1979)

A LIBRARY AS LARGE AS THE WORLD, 2024

structure made of papier-mâché, bamboo, seeds, and wool

A collection of books is an intimate portrait: it holds a constellation of associations that we are invited to connect with. The circular shape of this library becomes a vessel, frame, and pedestal for Federico Campagna's selection. Four identical openings spiral inward, symbolising the four seasons into which the space is divided. The cyclical nature and circular structure of the division invite us to envision multiple superimposed interpretations – both of the books within and of the space itself. Reflecting the piece's recurring theme, a fragment of the library – made with seed paper – will be composted. As it decomposes, a flower garden will blossom; leaving a trace that will expand and dissolve over time.

My looking ripens things ... (Rainer Maria Rilke, 1899)

Peter FISCHLI (*1952)

SNOWMAN'S UNIVERSE, 2024

slide film, 15:54 minutes

For 30 years, Fischli/Weiss have created a world of videos, photographs and sculptures that tap the extraordinary potential of ordinary objects. One such thing is Snowman, which has stood guard in the garden since 2020, placed on the path to the Fondation Beyeler as its mostly friendly gatekeeper. In 2022, Peter Fischli released a book documenting Snowman's journey from its creation in 1987 to the present, complete with rich imagery, detailed captions, commentaries and research materials. Expanding on this, the new slide film – narrated by a computer-generated voice – explores both the whimsical and uncanny aspects of Snowman's universe.

Like Frankenstein's monster in his tank or Snow White in her glass coffin, Snowman is permanently confined to his cooled vitrine – that's the price he pays for his survival.

Arthur Jafa (*1960)

LOML, 2022

single-channel video, colour, sound, 11:32 minutes

The late cultural critic Greg Tate described his long-time friend Arthur Jafa (AJ) as having an 'obsession with witnessing through images'. As a visual artist, AJ assembles images taken from history, fine art, popular culture, music and cinema, drawing the viewer into a world of harmonious yet strange sequences. His gaze, which highlights chaos and dissonance, resembles a lens set on the cultural nuances of the African American experience.

In LOML, AJ pays tribute to the recently passed Greg Tate by exploring the lines between light and shadow, showing a new interest for abstraction. This mesmerising chiaroscuro fluctuation made of brighter and darker tones describes his own feelings. Neither light nor darkness holds sway completely, yet they dance together.

I made LOML in the wake of my best friend, Greg Tate's death, two years ago. We were in a 'Vulcan mind meld' for over forty years. — He loved him madly.

DREAM HOTEL ROOM 1:
DREAMING OF FLYING WITH FLYING FLY AGARICS, 2024
mixed materials

'This dream bed is as much an experience as it is an installation', says Carsten Höller, 'but the real question is: what sense does it make to sleep and dream?' Containing a robotic bed and a surreal mushroom in motion, this dream room invites visitors to take a one-hour nap. Beginning to move at the onset of sleep, like a flying carpet, the bed immerses you in a mesmerising atmosphere. The work also happens in a space, a context and a situation, leading visitors through a transformative and unique experience based around sleep and dreams. 'Men in their waking state have just one world, common to all. In sleep everybody returns to their own private world', Plutarch quotes Heraclitus.

The room is also available for overnight stays.

THE END OF IMAGINATION VI, 2024

live simulations of active digital ecologies and layered composites of organic, inorganic, man- and machine-made matter

THE END OF IMAGINATION VII, 2024

live simulations of active digital ecologies and layered composites of organic, inorganic, man- and machine-made matter

In his research, a mix of film, writing, science-fiction, drawing, installation and performative traces, Adrián Villar Rojas creates immersive environments and experiences seemingly in a state of perpetual space-time travel. For this exhibition, the artist uses the 'Time Engine', an amalgamation of software programmes based on procedural generation and AI, to model digital ecologies. This engine simulates conditions, then produces visually rendered data of the effects of time on a sculpture (or any artifact) of the artist's design: modeling worlds that in turn model sculptures. Here, a washing machine and refrigerator now host mutant parasites, alive and dead, while spinning, buzzing, and transmitting, defying the laws of thermodynamics to perform in a state of perpetual motion.

What if we could see and think of ourselves – humanity – from an alien perspective; detached, unprejudiced, acultural? What if we could think of ourselves from the borders of our own completed path?

Ian CHENG (*1984)

THOUSAND LIVES, 2023–2024
artificial life simulation and sound

Thousand Lives is a simulation that dramatises the daily life of Thousand, a tiny but vital character from Ian Cheng's anime Life After BOB. Thousand is driven by a neuro-symbolic AI model that attempts to learn the relevance to its own internal reptilian urges of everything it encounters. Over the course of many days, Thousand develops a recognition of the resources and threats present in Chalice's messy apartment environment, minimising setbacks to its expectations, and constructing new motives to better satisfy its competing urges. This gradual but steady development forms the ongoing drama of Thousand's lifetime in a new kind of 'slow story' generated only by means of simulation.

What if an artwork could integrate you into its dream?

Rirkrit TIRAVANIJA (*1961)

UNTITLED (Old Smokey lounge), 2024

Old Smokey charcoal grills, garden furniture, food, drink, cigarettes, cigars, a lot of smoke, and a lot of people

'Far Eastern thought is not concerned with substance, but with relationships', the philosopher Byung-Chul Han points out. Rather than making objects for a static display, Rirkrit Tiravanija focuses on interactions between people and their surroundings. He also encourages visitors to be active participants instead of passive consumers of culture. Since the 1990s, Tiravanija has been making artworks that reflect his personal history and daily experiences. 'In many ways maybe all of the work I do or have done is about trying to locate myself.' Here, too, his work exemplifies his relational approach. For the exhibition, he has converted the terrace into a slow-cooking kitchen for the evenings and into a place where visitors can meet and linger, have a smoke, a drink and a bite during opening hours.

For me, staying in place might mean staying with my own thoughts, even if the body keeps traveling.

gelatine capsules, placebo, drop mechanism, control unit, and water dispenser

Dropping every three seconds on the floor of the exhibition space, bicolored pills gradually form a sculptural element, thus marking the passing of time. Around three seconds is the time frame we perceive as 'present'. Like the fly agaric mushroom in Carsten Höller's Dream Bed, the pills are red and white, suggesting potential parallels between the two works. The visitor is invited to take a pill, to see whether it affects her or his relation to the space, exhibition, and dreams that follow.

Note: These pills have been developed to ensure they contain no allergenic substances.

Cyprien GAILLARD with Victor MAN
AFTER GIORGIO DE CHIRICO (1888–1978)

Cyprien GAILLARD (*1980)

RETINAL RIVALRY, 2024
stereoscopic 3D film, 31 minutes

Continuing themes explored in his 3D-film Nightlife (2015), for his new film Cyprien Gaillard uses stereoscopic motion for its sculptural, spectral and psychedelic potential. By expanding the pictorial space and embracing the medium's spatiality as an organising principle for the various subjects considered, the film leaves narration behind to focus on pure vision. Fluctuating between deep void and sculptural effect, the images protrude beyond the screen into the exhibition space, altering our perception of the visible world. The artist centres his gaze on the German environment, with a dissonant soundtrack that has been synchronised with the images. Sources include Sudanese music discovered in UNESCO archives in Paris and the sound of a street organ in Weimar.

Retinal Rivalry is a film about space, I wanted my images to have an echo to them, like a Dub version of cinema.

Victor MAN (*1974)

PIAZZA D'ITALIA, 2024
oil on canvas

For the most recent work in his Luminary Petals on a Wet, Black Bough series, Victor Man has reconstituted from memory a painting inspired by Giorgio De Chirico's iconic metaphysical series, Piazza d'Italia. Rendered in black oil paint from a tube that was sourced from De Chirico's studio by Cyprien Gaillard, the painting is half-ghost, half-invention, both true to and far removed from its phantasmatic source. In a charnel house palette, derived from a material that connects all three artists, the painting activates a complex circuit of conceptual and material concerns. In it, De Chirico is returned to his most referenced motif of the empty town square via a bifurcated intervention staged jointly by Gaillard and Man.

KOO JEONG A (*1967)

BOOLGASAEU BOOLGASALI, 2024

cast in bronze, dark patina

KOO JEONG A's site-specific work opens narrative portals, with various media combined with natural elements such as wind, gravity or the electromagnetic field. Thus, alternative realities are conjured up not only geographically, but also astrally and poetically.

For this exhibition, KOO has made two bronze stones originating from a series of daily drawings made in 2005 and 2013–14.

By placing them asymmetrically in meticulous tension, the installation triggers dynamism, refracting the viewer into a different cosmic constellation that both connects and expands. For KOO, art is an act of reverence containing the surprise of discovery, approaching a state of perpetual oscillating, trembling, and vibrating.

I see myself as an emission of radiation.

Pierre HUYGHE (*1962)

IDIOM, 2024

real-time voice generated by artificial neural network, golden LED screen masks and sensors

The French philosopher Jean-François Lyotard asked, 'can thought go on without a body?' From Idiom emerges a new, invented language, incomprehensible, self-generated over the course of the exhibition. 'This unknown language is an expanded vision of another world, outside of ours, which grows endlessly'. Pierre Huyghe invites visitors to follow other realities, to become strangers to themselves, adopting a non-human perspective. In the exhibition, Idiom masks are moved through space by mute humans to gather data by means of sensors. This data is then converted into an ineffable syntax that amplifies over time. The bodiless entities of Idiom become a community speaking from another reality.

The exhibition is the site of constitution for inhuman subjectivities to define and discover a will within themselves. It's not about being the parent of sentient creatures, rather allowing them to appear without author or creator.

Dozie KANU (*1993)

CHAIR [xx] (Fondation Beyeler Security), 2024
aluminium and polyurethane foam

For this exhibition, Dozie Kanu aimed at expanding the traditional boundaries of sculpture and creating objects that viewers and museum guards are invited to manipulate. The goal was to go beyond the purely optical and include tactile qualities as well. Fueled by his fascination for Franz West's chairs at the Fondation Beyeler, Kanu invites us to sit and linger on his seats, which simultaneously retain their status as elusive works of art.

I think hope is one of the most important elements of what artists provide.

Rachel ROSE (*1986)

WHAT TIME IS HEAVEN, 2024
booklet, 64 pages

These are a series of still photographs taken throughout the Fondation Beyeler of the spaces that we all see and don't pay much attention to: the bathrooms, the elevator, the hallways – now shrouded in haze, backlit, silhouetted in shadows – dramatising the simplest landscapes, imagining more ephemeral, possessed possibilities for what at first glance appears real and mundane.

I'm thinking about how we experience, or try to experience, infinite space and time through the most finite, basic methods.

For this exhibition, poets and musicians have been invited to a residency at the Fondation Beyeler. The poets have been asked to imagine projects that take poetry beyond the book and thereby enrich the museum experience for the visitors. During their residency, they will find ways in which the exhibition may serve as an active and narrative space for telling stories within stories, for transforming fiction into reality and reality into fiction, memories into words and words into memories. The musicians in residence will present a concert in the course of the exhibition.
